The Oregon Semi-Weekly Journal will soon begin the publication of a new newspaper novel by Paul De Laney entitled "The Sheepherder." In order to give our readers a chance to read this story, we have arranged an unprecedented low clubbing rate with the Journal. This paper and the Semi-Weekly Journal will be given one year, the two for $2.00. Call at this office at once and subscribe in order to get the first chapter of the story. This offer applies to old subscribers paying in advance as well as new ones.

Paul De Laney has spent five years in traveling in Eastern Oregon, Washington, Idaho and California, and has seen every phase of life in this vast region. His first novel was "The Lord of the Desert," which was inspired in his travels through this country. His second novel, and more popular than the first was the "Toilers of the Columbia," but now he has written a better story still—a story that will live. It is a new feature in fiction. It deals with the great range wars, the timber land frauds, and the irrigation projects in all romantic spirit. See this paper about getting the story.

Capt. A. M. Short was compelled last week to kill the big elk, leader of the herd he has in his park, north of Medford, says the Mail. The animal was six years old and weighed close to 1000 pounds, in spite of being in poor condition. For the past two years his disposition has been growing steadily worse and several people have had narrow escapes from being seriously injured by him. Finally Capt. Short, as a means of protection for his family and the public at large, decided to kill the animal, and this was done last week. The elk was just in the act of changing his winter coat for the summer one and in a few weeks would have been valuable as a specimen, but he had become so viscious that his owners would not risk delaying the execution.
